Entitled "Classy Blues" as a spin on the Clase Azul Tequila, the photograph features a well-lit, neatly organized setting of tequila bottles cast in blue light.

The "Thanks but we already know" graffiti was not visible to the naked eye when Monson took the photo, but became clear during the editing process, revealing a second message and changing its meaning.

An Irish seascape features a woman standing at the edge of the sea, with two sailboats far in the distance, offering a unique perspective on the body of water and communicating a feeling of vastness.

Shot in Times Square in NYC, photograph captures the daily moment in time when the energy of the area changes. The title, "Going Down," is a double entendre alluding to the sun and the ebbing energy.

The glow of the books emits a feeling of tangibility as if the bookcases captured in the photo are actually on the wall and not a flat photograph.

COMPANY INFORMATION

Photography is a world of light and color; and when you add texture, it is a world Allyson has loved since childhood.

Growing up in the suburbs of New York brought the city to her fingertips. People, lights, sound and movement always fascinated Allyson. The pace and energy of worldwide metropolitan cities remain one of her favorite subjects. And, her work further reflects the water and nature that were part of youthful summer memories of time spent on Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard. You might say her work has been evolving forever.

She attended the University of Rhode Island majoring in Textiles, Merchandising, and Design. This program offered her the opportunity to study Interior Design at The Studio Arts Center International in Florence, Italy through the Cleveland Institute of Art. It was in Florence Allyson began viewing everyday objects from a different perspective.

Now she sees the world around her beyond the naked eye. Her work varies. However, there is an underlying consistency throughout Allyson's work that evokes light, texture, color and movement, connecting the past with the present.

Allyson works with interior designers, retailers and to the trade showrooms. She has exhibited in many galleries and shows including the Affordable Art Show - NYC, Red Dot Show at Art Basel - Miami, Art Market Hamptons and The Architectural Digest Show - NYC.
